An "Evening World" reporter finally ascertained that Mr. Jackson, in company with George Dixon and Tom O'Rourke, had gone to pay a visit at Mr. Richard K. Fox's publication office. There the presence of the colored pugilist was denied, Manager Moorehead asserting that he did not expect to see Jackson, but thought it likely that Mr. O'Rourke would visit the office. When an "Evening World" reporter called later he learned that Mr. William E. Harding had taken the great pugilist in tow during the temporary absence of Mr. Moorehead and had effloyed a short conversation with him. To the reporter Mr. Harding said:

"I did not mention the offer of the Sloux City Club to Jackson, as it would have done no good. There is no use in talking to Jackson on that subject. Tom O'Rourke, his manager, does all the talking for him."

This statement of Mr. Harding was an absolute confirmation of the information published in "The Evening World" on Jackson's arrival, that O'Rourke had succeeded Parson Davies as Jackson's manager.

After Histening to argument upon it, the Court sustained a point raised by Miss Lawrence's counsel that he lacked jurisdiction, and that instead of his client having been arrested on a State warrant, proceedings should have been begun in a civil court.

Miss Lawrence was consequently discharged from custody.

Harry Leonard, brother of Miss Phoebe Leonard, then announced that his sister would begin a civil action against Miss Lawrence for exemplary damages for slander.

In some mysterious way Mr. Piatt was informed of Mr. Morton's arrival. Before that time reporters had no trouble in getting an audience with him.

Tive minutes after Mr. Morton's arrival at the Grand Central station Mr. Platt became invisible, and it was stated that he had gone off somewhere to discuss Mr. Morton's candidacy with Mr. Morton himself, and in a place where they would be free from intrusion. That was all wrong, however. Mr. Morton did not see Mr. Platt until shortly after 4 P. M. He reached his office at 2.45 P. M. and at that time said to an "Evening World" reporter:

"I have nothing to say yet. Be patient, and you shall know in good time what I intend doing."

"Have you seen Mr. Platt to day?"

"Again I must ask you to excuse me. I will only say that no decision has yet been reached. Therefore it is too early for ms to talk."

Mr. Morton then entered his private office and instructed his secretary to say for publication.
